taken out from under the powerful influence of the Slemps, who in recent years have seemed to carry the day out there. So it becomes after all merely a political question and largely one of party policy, and it is interesting to know what the Legislature will do about it. While the amendment would to some extent equalize population conditions between the Sixth and Ninth Districts, yet if no further changes are made, there will be discrepancies between others quite as glaring as those existing between them at this time, and if sweeping amendments affecting other portions of the State are offered and pressed, the bill would seem doomed to defeat.

The night service was conducted by Rev. Dr. Whitman, of Philadelphia. Sitting on the rostrum with him were Rev. O. Eliyson, brother of the Lieutenant-Governor; Dr. J. B. Taylor and Dr. W. R. J. Smith, paster.

Dr. Whitman took as his subject the words: "But we have the mind of Christ," taken from I. Corinthians, first chapter sixteenth verse.

Dr. Whitman's sermon, delivered in a strong, deep and resonant voice, resounding through all the auditorium, was a model of power and eloquence. He presented his thoughts in a most scholarly but clear and definite style. At times he rose to a poetical intensity of thought and feeling, swaying his hearers into a harmonious unison with his own ideals of the higher and spiritual mode of living; and in his vivid imagery of words brought forth a natural illustration of the appeal lying in his portrayal of the mind of Christ as characterized in the spiritualized mind of man.

God Pervades All.

God Pervades All.

God Pervades All.

In the most natural and beautiful illustrations he showed how all nature is but the outpouring of the personality of God and how the mind of Christ is imparted to man through his recipiency of the highest physical, aesthetic and ethical forces of the natural world. According as these exert their proper influence on the mind of man and are tinged with a divine faith and religious feeling and made a part of man's daily living, so is the mind of Christ imparted to and made a living element of the minds of his followers. Reciting a few lines from Wordsworth's "Tintern Abbey." he showed how beautiful and ethical is the influence of nature on her child and how closely associated is man's life, if passed in its natural fulfillment with the best and truest and highest in the physical forces around him. So is man spiritualized, and so he becomes, in his spirituality, more like the Christ. Comparing the physical senses, he showed how poor it is in comparison with the spiritual world, as seen through the Light of the World, Jesus Christ. as seen through the Light of the World are, and immortality in a world of blis shall come as the reward for the righteous life. Saying that in his mortal life he is happy and contented, he yet declared himself as unafraid of death, because it is but the fulfillment of life—a moment's passing from earthly happiness to immortal bliss.

Showing that man's life is varied in extensiveness and interspectations.

Showing that man's life is varied in ex-tensiveness and intensiveness, according to the reaction of physica, ethical, aes-thetic and meral influences on the soul, he said that the fulness of life can be brought about only by the further reac-tion on the soul of spiritual objects and influences. He appealed to his hearers to take on the mind of Christ, so that man may live his life in the broadest and deep-est intensiveness and extensiveness; so

THE TRANSFIGURATION.

Rev. E. L. Powell Preaches Able Sermon to Large Congregation.

Sermon to Large Congregation.

The Rev. E. L. Powell preached yesterday morning to a crowded house at the West End Christian Church, taking for his subject the scene of the transfiguration of Christ. He said in part that a few days before the day of transfiguration Peter had uttered in a moment of transcendent realization of the greatness of the Christ, the wonderful words, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living tod," and that as soon as Christ knew that His disciples understood His mission, He began to tell them of His approaching crucinkion. This was a a cloud to their day of hopes about to be realized. The thought of death in association with the Son or God was incompatible. The disciples needed to be prepared for His forthcoming death. They must realize that only by walking the thorny road can and they fail to read in the flowers, birds, trees, plains, mountains and seas His messages of pardon, peace and love. The transfluration was necessary to Christ as a help to Him to stand the coming trial and crudition. His great heart yearned for sympathy and love, human and Divine. The dectrine of heavenly recognition is clearly taught in this seene. We will recognize our loved ones in their individual capacity when we reach heaven. Moses and Elijah were easily known by the disciples. The tendency of the human heart in such matters is away from matterial to things spiritual. The transfiguration established absolutely the Sonship of Jesus. That is the great central thought and essential of the Christian religion. Denominational lines will be wiped out by the transfiguration thought of this Sonship.

All of His commands are to be obeyed because and only because He gave, the command.

The sermon was repiete with graphic descriptions, cloquent periods and elevating thoughts.

Rev. Mr. Forsyth preached at St. Paul's last evening on "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize? So run that ye may obtain." He spoke of the three things necessary in the race of life-concentration, rule, effort-and enlarged on the necessity for the same qualities in the Christian race. He urged on his hearers that something definite, and regular of time, self and means be given to the service of God. He referred, as he had done in the morning, to the intercollegiate afflucing price; held here Saturday night, as a most intelligent effort in the direction of sound, manly, wholesome sport.
